

SHTS1 THEATRE STUDIES 1

STUDIOS

This unit is the first of two that introduce students to a synchronic world view of theatre studies. It offers an overview of theatre and drama in many world cultures and periods together with case studies that demonstrate the various methods, historiographical theories and interpretive approaches used by contemporary theatre historians. Students will consider the range of theatre's origins in ritual performance and theatre through religious and civic drama, to early theatre in court, temple, marketplace, oral and writing cultures before 1700, to theatre and performance in print cultures up to 1900.

SHAF ACTING FOUNDATIONS

PRACTICAL

This unit introduces students to the foundations of acting. The unit is delivered in a studio environment, where students will be introduced to the idea of the body being the actor's instrument as they explore fundamental relaxation, movement, and vocal techniques. Students encounter different approaches to acting practice, and have the opportunity to discover what works for them and develop awareness of spontaneity and cooperation. Students are also introduced to scene analysis, culminating in scene work.

SHTM THEATRE MAKING

PRACTICAL

This unit introduces students to the basics of theatre making. Divided into three modules, the unit gives students an overview of writing for performance, technical theatre, and directing. In the writing module, students learn fundamental principles of plot, characterisation, structure, and dialogue. In the technical theatre module, students are introduced to the basics of lighting, sound, and stage management. Students learn practical skills of rigging, plotting, and desk operation. In addition, students are introduced to conceptual and aesthetic principles of technical theatre. In the directing module, students are given an overview of the basics of directing, including how to approach the text, conceptualise a production, and work with actors.

CRFCRFS CREATIVE FOUNDATIONS

CREATIVE FOUNDATIONS

Creativity is more than just inspiration; it is a skill, a discipline, and an essential tool for navigating the complexities of the modern world. In this unit, you will explore creativity's role across diverse disciplines and communities, gaining valuable insight into the ethical and cultural values that shape creative practice. You will develop critical skills to evaluate information, articulate ideas, and confidently reflect on creative work. By engaging with a dynamic community of students from across Collarts, you will have the opportunity to explore your creative potential and establish a strong foundation for your studies and future career in the creative industries.

STUDIOS

This unit offers an overview of theatre and drama in many world cultures and periods together with case studies that demonstrate the various methods, historiographical theories and interpretive approaches used by contemporary theatre historians. The unit applies a breadth of geographical coverage for exploring the interrelation of theatre with social and cultural history using historical methodology. Students will examine the more recent range of influences on contemporary theatre.

SHEP ENSEMBLE PRODUCTION

PRACTICAL

This unit brings students together to work on an ensemble performance under the guidance of a theatre director. The student cohort will work on a text-based piece of theatre or a devised performance. Students will implement the learning they have achieved to date in an experiential exploration of practice and the practical application of theory. Students will self-allocate to specific roles as actor, writer, director, or stage manager. The unit will also encourage self-reflection and constructive critical analysis.

CRFIDOS INDUSTRY FOUNDATIONS

CREATIVE FOUNDATIONS

In this unit, you will immerse yourself in the world of the creative industries and explore the many pathways to transforming your passion into a profession. Through insights from industry professionals and hands-on creative activities, you will develop a deeper understanding of how your industry operates while reflecting on your career aspirations and creative potential. From generating ideas to bringing them to life, you will experiment with flexible approaches to creative collaboration, working on cross-disciplinary projects that mirror real-world creative environments. By gaining a clearer perspective on the industry landscape, you will be better equipped to carve out your place as a creative professional and make confident, informed career choices.

SHTCP TWENTIETH CENTURY PRACTICE

STUDIOS

This unit presents an overview of selected twentieth century directors and their influences on acting methodologies and performance practice. Beginning with an overview of Stanislavski and The Method, this unit will introduce students to the theories and practice of various practitioners who have been influential in shaping contemporary performance. The unit will comprise scholarly examination and practice-based exploration. This is a common unit shared between all students in the Performing Arts BPAs, Acting, Writing/Directing and Stage Management.

PAAS3 ACTING STUDIO

PRACTICAL

This unit introduces students to three new methodologies of performance: Butoh, viewpoints, and clowning (Lecoq and Bouffon). The unit is divided into three modules of three to four weeks, in each of which the specific subject of study will be taught through practice-based learning, contextualised by selected reading resources on each method. The unit uses a practicum model to facilitate sequential learning, culminating in short performances at the end of each module.

ACTADRS APPLIED DRAMATURGY

CREATIVE FOUNDATIONS

This unit introduces students to the foundational skills of dramaturgy in an applied context. It provides an overview of the history of dramaturgical theories, tracing key developments from Aristotle and Lessing to Brecht, Lehmann, and the post-dramatic. Students will explore the practical applications of these theories through hands-on, collaborative studio experimentation. The unit also introduces the field of Theatre Semiotics through a dual approach. Upon completing this unit, students will be equipped to critically engage with the dynamic interplay between performance, audience, and the broader social and cultural contexts in which theatre operates. The integration of theoretical and practical tools culminates in a performance installation developed from a selected source text. This is a common unit shared between all students in the Performing Arts BPAs, Acting, Writing/Directing and Stage Management.

PATH4 AUSTRALIAN THEATRE

STUDIOS

This unit aims to contextualise for students the history of Australian theatre, the political and cultural issues surrounding it and a considered examination of selected theatrical works. Students will analyse the development of Australian theatre and the movement for a national voice, contextualised by the performance tradition of the First Nations custodians of country. Students will examine current issues regarding culture and women in theatrical representation and contemporary arguments regarding authenticity, adaptation, and appropriation.

This is a common unit shared between all students in the Performing Arts BPAs, Acting, Writing/Directing and Stage Management.

SHCOP COLLABORATIVE PROJECT

PRACTICAL

This unit brings together students from the BPAs in Writing & Directing, Acting and Stage Management to work on a collaborative performance under the guidance of professional practitioners. The student cohort will divide to work on a text-based piece of theatre or a devised performance. Students will implement the learning they have done to date in an experiential exploration of practice and the practical application of theory. Students within each degree will self-allocate to roles appropriate to their degree and be mentored in their work by professional practitioners. The unit will also encourage self-reflection and constructively critical analysis of the work produced.

ELECTIVE

For this unit students will choose one of the nominated units from another degree programs at Collarts. Students ultimately have dozens of units to choose from at this stage in their degree. Audio students could choose units from Entertainment Management, Photography and much more to broaden their knowledge in the creative arts and work with students from other parts of the college.

SHTCI INTIMACY, CONSENT, STAGE COMBAT

STUDIOS

This unit brings together students from the BPAs in Writing & Directing, Acting and Stage Management to learn the principles and practices of safe physical interaction in performance. It will cover intimacy coordination, consent, fight/contact choreography, annotation of safe practice and the creation and facilitation of safe working environments for theatre and screen.

PAAS3A IMPROVISATION

PRACTICAL

This unit gives students the opportunity to study different forms of improvisation practice. It introduces students to the theory and practice of simple imaginative play, teaches mechanisms for overcoming fear and self-consciousness, and encourages students to explore their creativity through non-judgmental play. Students are introduced to the work of Mike Leigh and to long form improvisation as a means of devising performances.

PAAS3B SCREEN ACTING

PRACTICAL

This unit provides students with an overview on the differences between stage and screen acting and, through weekly practical classes, students have the opportunity to create convincing screen portrayals using different techniques. Students can adapt their acting skills for the camera and learn about the logistics of screen production as it concerns actors. The aim of this unit is to expand knowledge and skills in performance to realise the different professional pathways available to actors beyond the stage, which includes preparing for auditions and producing a showreel.

ACTDPRS DEVISING PROJECT

CREATIVE FOUNDATIONS

This unit explores performance methodologies and collaborative making strategies for the creation of new devised performance work. Students will engage in applied learning of diverse performance-making processes to critically examine and develop their own collaborative practice. They will develop the necessary skills to communicate their methodologies, equipping themselves to become industry-ready, proactive, and articulate artists. This learning will culminate in the creation of a devised work responding to a range of stimuli, including texts, stories, music, and image, and presented to a live audience. This is a common unit shared between all students in the Performing Arts BPAs, Acting, Writing/Directing and Stage Management.

SHPI PERFORMANCE INNOVATION

STUDIOS

This unit provides students with a broad study of theories of performance, an understanding of the conceptual and material thinking underpinning historical and contemporary forms of avant-garde performance and case studies of various works and practitioners who have been influential in their innovation of performance practice. Students will learn about the frames, possibilities and limitations of performance and will gain an understanding of shifting definitions of live and recorded performance. This is a common unit shared between all students in the Performing Arts BPAs, Acting, Writing/Directing and Stage Management.

SHCPRO CAPSTONE PRODUCTION

PRACTICAL

This unit builds on the learning achieved in the Collaborative Project. This unit brings together students from the BPA (Writing & Directing), BPA (Acting) and BPA (Stage Management) to work on a collaborative performance under the guidance of professional practitioners. The student cohort will work on a text-based piece of theatre or a devised performance. Students will implement the learning they have done to date in an experiential exploration of practice and the practical application of theory. Students within each degree will self-allocate to roles appropriate to their degree and be mentored in their work by professional practitioners. The unit will also encourage self-reflection and constructive critical analysis of the work produced.

CRFIPLS/CRFPPFS INDUSTRY PLACEMENT OR PROFESSIONAL PORTFOLIO

CREATIVE FOUNDATIONS

Students will be involved in the day-to-day activities of a chosen workplace where they will have the opportunity to apply some of the theoretical knowledge and practical skills that they have developed during the course. Students will be connected to a range of industry organisations and professionals. They will review their industry placement as they observe, develop, analyse and critically assess skills and knowledge acquired during this placement, and reflect on the implications for future career goals and directions, or complete a portfolio developed throughout the course.
